INTRODUCTION

Each year the Cawley Career Education Center surveys Georgetown University's graduating class to assess their post-graduation activities. The survey asks, "Which of the following BEST describes the current state of your PRIMARY post-graduation plans?" Survey respondents may then choose one of the following options:

- Employment, full-time
- Employment, part-time
- Graduate or professional school, full-time
- Graduate or professional school, part-time
- Seeking employment
- Service activity
- Military service
- Undecided
- Other activity

In addition to primary post-graduation activity, we ask graduates who report "Employment," "Service activity," or "Military service" for their employer, job title, career field, starting salary, and job location. The information we collect from the Senior Survey provides valuable insight into the wide variety of opportunities available to Georgetown University graduates.

METHODOLOGY

For the purposes of our survey, we define the Class of 2012 as those who completed undergraduate degrees from Georgetown College, the McDonough School of Business, the Walsh School of Foreign Service, and the School of Nursing and Health Studies in December 2011, May 2012, and August 2012.

The primary means by which we collected information from members of the Class of 2012 was our online survey instrument. We invited members of the Class of 2012 by e-mail to take the survey beginning in April 2012 and continued to remind them about the online survey until we closed the survey in November 2012. Graduates who had already responded were invited to update their previous responses if their post-graduation plans had changed.

In an effort to learn about post-graduation activities of as many members of the Class of 2012 as possible, we searched for usable data beyond our online survey. In the fall of 2012, we made phone calls to members of the class who had not responded to the survey and conducted an abbreviated version of the survey over the phone.

In addition to these efforts, two of Georgetown's undergraduate schools also asked members of the Class of 2012 about their post-graduation plans and released their findings in the books distributed at Tropaea exercises before graduation. We collected this information to augment our data. This year, for the first time, we also searched for members of the Class of 2012 on the professional social media network LinkedIn, where we found a significant amount of usable employment information about the Class of 2012. Combining data from all of these sources, we were able to account for the post-graduation activities of 55 percent of 2012 graduates.
